Ninety-year-old gynecologist recovers to perform dance act

A broken pelvis and congestive heart failure threatened her life. Two and a half weeks later, a 90-year-old retired gynecologist, who was unable to walk for two months, has recovered and will perform a rumba tonight for her nursing home mates. She will take the floor at 7 p.m. at the Greens Adult Living Center, 1555 Brainard Road, Lyndhurst (440) 646-1030.

Anjel Yaldiz, M.D. retired from her career as a doctor, was shelved with a broken pelvis accompanied by heart palpitations, congestive heart failure and a near zero blood count and nearly passed away before making a spectacular recovery 2 1/2 weeks ago. Dr. Yaldiz's professional dance teacher, Abraham Klein, co-founder of Cheek-to-Cheek Dance Company, helped her get back on her feet, leading into tonight's surprise performance.

"I snuck a walker in two weeks ago," Klein said. "I was able to help her walk and now she's ready to do a rumba with me."

Klein and his professional partner, Leila Ivanova, will do a small show for the nursing home residents. For the climax, Dr. Yaldiz will do the rumba, commonly known as "the dance of love."

Yaldiz and Klein have been dancing together in competitions in the pro-am division for the past 15 years and have traveled to Vienna, Austria; Montreal and Toronto, Canada; the Bahamas; and virtually every city between New York and Los Angeles. Klein's expertise in dance instruction revolves around dance theater. He takes his students into competitions in which they wear costumes while doing solos, acting out scenes within the dance choreography. Klein and Dr. Yaldiz once did a scene from "Annie Get your Gun," in which the doctor rode on his back as if she were riding a horse.

Klein can be contacted for an interview, a film crew or a photograph at 216-570-5859. Ivanova, the co-founder of Cheek-to-Cheek, can be reached at 440-522-1105.
