New Web site simplifies CEU search for health care professionals

CLEVELAND - Finding quality continuing education courses in the health care field has become easier with the launch of ContinuingEducationLinks.com. The Web site provides health care professionals with a comprehensive, up-to-date listing of on-site and online continuing education courses, searchable by geographical location and occupation.

The site also offers job searches for health care professionals via online partner Career Builder.

Time constraints and a reduction in employer reimbursements have made it increasingly tedious for health care employees to accumulate continuing education credits. The need for traditional CEU sources like conferences, workshops and classroom instruction is greater than ever, while the demand for off-site resources like online, video conference and home study courses continues to grow.

ContinuingEducationLinks.com is a national CEU database overseen by a licensed health-care professional who administers the site daily to ensure all course listings are accurate and properly managed. The course listings, which include convenient links for online registration, include the cost of each course, the number of CEUs the course offers and other important information.

"As the healthcare industry becomes increasingly competitive, the demands on its workforce to maintain their professional credentials become more challenging," said Kelsey Loushin, CEO of ContinuingEducationLinks.com. "We are dedicated to providing an invaluable service both to professionals seeking continuing education courses as well as the program developers who need a cost-effective means of reaching them."

Occupational searches can be performed for more than 40 different health care disciplines. Courses can be filtered to display specific delivery methods, such as seminars, workshops, classroom, Web courses, correspondence courses, teleconferences, home study or CD/DVD training. For example, a Licensed Social Worker (LSW) can search for seminars located in Ohio, or a registered nurse can search for Web-based courses.

Course providers who advertise their programs on the site are required to provide proof of their certifications. Providers interested in listing their programs do so by logging onto ContinuingEducationLinks.com and signing up as a new course provider.

ContinuingEducationLinks.com also offers a monthly newsletter with course updates and other exclusive information.

Loushin is a Licensed Independent Chemical Dependency Counselor with extensive experience in the field of continuing education development and marketing.
